Sam Bott

http://wwwf.imperial.ac.uk/~shb104/c s.bott@imperial.ac.uk

15th February 2014

Imperial College London

Sam Bott

C for Science

Matrices continued.. Structs More on Scope Using Binary Data Summary 000000 Working with Matrices Matrices - Details For matrices allocated in the previous lecture points to a matrix - more specifically, it points to matrix an array holding the addresses of each row points to the first row of the matrix matrix[0] The top left element of the matrix matrix[0][0] Which have the following types: matrix double ** matrix[0] double * matrix[0][0] double Sam Bott C for Science

Last Week...

- A char is the smallest addressable data type (1 byte). It is used as either an ascii character or a very small integer.
- stdin, stderr and stdout are the standard console streams. File streams are opened with fopen.
- Memory can be allocated dynamically using malloc. This is useful for large (or unknown size) arrays and matrices.
- free is used to release previously allocated memory back to the stack; forgetting to 'free' memory causes memory-leaks.

Sam Bott

```
Matrices continued..
                        Structs
                                           More on Scope
                                                                                 Using Binary Data
                                                                                                        Summary
0000000
Higher Dimensional Arrays
       1 double  alloc3Tensor(unsigned int dim)
           unsigned int i, j;
           tensor = (double ) malloc(dim*sizeof(double **));
            if (!tensor) return NULL;
            tensor[0] = (double ) malloc(dim*dim*sizeof(double *));
           if (!tensor[0])
              return NULL;
            tensor[0][0] = (double *) malloc(dim*dim*dim*sizeof(double));
           if (!tensor[0][0])
              free(tensor[0]); free(tensor);
              return NULL; 18
            for (i = 1; i < dim; i++) tensor[0][i] = tensor[0][i-1]+dim;
            for (i = 1; i < dim; i++)
              tensor[i] = tensor[i-1] + dim;
              tensor[i][0] = tensor[i-1][0] + dim * dim;
              for (j = 1; j < dim; j++)
                 tensor[i][j] = tensor[i][j-1] + dim;
     26
     28
           return tensor;
     29 }
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

```
Matrices continued..
                 Structs
                               More on Scope
                                              Compiling
                                                          Using Binary Data
                                                                          Summary
0000000
Higher Dimension Arrays
More Multi-Index
      • The 3D array behaves as expected:
                          tensor[i][j][k] = 0.5;
      • The array can be freed with:
         void free3Tensor(double  tensor)
             free(tensor[0][0]);
             free(tensor[0]);
             free (tensor);
```

Sam Bott

C for Science

```
Compiling
Matrices continued.
                    Structs
                                    More on Scope
                                                                   Using Binary Data
                                                                                      Summary
0000000
                                                                                      0
Non-'Square' Arrays
      1 int main()
            unsigned int size = 10, r, c;
            int  pasc;
            pasc = (int ) malloc(size*sizeof(int *));
            pasc[0] = (int ) malloc(size(size+1)*sizeof(int)/2);
            /* check the mallocs */ for (r=1; r < size; r++) pasc[r] = pasc[r-1]+r;
            pasc[0][0] = 1;
            for (r = 1; r < size; r++)</pre> 12 for (c = 1; c < r; c++)
                   pasc[r][c] = pasc[r-1][c-1]+pasc[r-1][c]; 14
               pasc[r][0] = 1; pasc[r][r] = 1; 15 16 for (r=0; r < size; r++)</pre> 17 18 for (c = 0; c < r+1; c++) 19 printf("%3d ", pasc[r][c]); 20
               printf("\n");
     22
            free (pasc[0]);
            free (pasc);
     24
            return 0; 25 }
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

```
Matrices continued.
                     Structs
                                      More on Scope
                                                                       Using Binary Data
                                                                                           Summary
0000000
Non-'Square' Arrays
More Elaborate Data Structures
```

- In C we are able to manipulate data directly, this has allowed us to partition a contiguous array of memory into matrix rows.
- We needn't restrict ourselves to structures where the number of elements per row is constant, one example is Pascal's triangle:

```
1 1
  1 2 1
 1 3 3 1
1 4 6 4 1
```

Sam Bott

Sam Bott

C for Science

```
Matrices continued.
                  Structs
                                More on Scope
                                                              Using Binary Data
                                                                               Summary
000000 Non-'Square' Arrays
Pascal's Triangle
       • The program outputs:
            1
                      3
                           1
                      6
                           4
                     10
                          10
                     15 20 15
                     21 35
                               35
                                     21
                 8
                     28
                          56
                              70
                                    56
                                          28
                    36 84 126 126
                                          84
      • Whilst in memory, the data structure looks like:
```

```
Matrices continued.
                 Structs
                              More on Scope
                                              Compiling
                                                          Using Binary Data
                                                                          Summary
                 •0000000
Custom Data Types
Custom Data Types
    Recall, when dealing with files we used:
    FILE * file;
    file = fopen ("myfile.txt", "r");
    FILE is in fact a custom data type, with its own size:
    #include <stdio.h>
    int main()
        printf("sizeof(FILE) = %d\n", sizeof(FILE));
        return 0;
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

```
Matrices continued.
                 Structs
                              More on Scope
                                             Compiling
                                                         Using Binary Data 00000000
typedef Structures : Custom Data Types
      • FILE is a custom data type defined in <stdio.h>.
      • It is comprised of elements of different, known, types.
      • Each element of the FILE structure has its own name.
    Let's consider a structure of our own, one of the simplest examples is a complex number:
   typedef struct
                                          C99
                                         C99 fully supports its own double real;
        double imag;
                                         _Complex type.
   } complex;
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

```
Matrices continued.
                Structs
                             More on Scope
                                                       Using Binary Data
                                                                      Summary
                0000000
Custom Data Types
Except from MS - <stdio.h>
    (From Visual Studio 2008) struct iobuf {
        char *_ptr;
        int
               _cnt;
        char *_base;
               _flag;
               _file;
               charbuf;
               _bufsiz;
        char *_tmpfname;
        };
    typedef struct _iobuf FILE;
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

```
Matrices continued.
                  Structs
                                More on Scope
                                                             Using Binary Data
                                                                               Summary
                                                 Compiling 00000000 Defining Our Structs
typedef Structures - II
    Definitions of structures take the following form:
         typedef struct
             elementType elementName;
             elementType elementName;
         } structureTypeName;
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

Handling Structures

- A structure may be an argument to a function.
- A function may return a structure.
- A pointer may point to a structure.
- Structures are referenced as normal: &name.
- 1 Elements of a structure are referenced as: &name.element.
- A pointer to a structure may be passed to a function.
- If p is a pointer to a structure, then p->member allows us to access it's members.

Sam Bott

C for Science

More Structures

- Passing structures via pointer is usually more efficient.
- Assignment can be done at declaration or after.
- In C we are not allowed to overload operators, so the following won't work:

c1 = c2 + c3; (where c1 and c2 are complex) so we need to do something like:

complexAdd(&c1, &c2, &c3);

- Arrays of structs are allowed (so matrices can consist of complex numbers for example).
- Structures can contain structures as elements.

Sam Bott C for Science

Matrices continued. Structs More on Scope 00000000 Using Structures Example Function Applying to Structures 1 #include <stdio.h> 3 typedef struct double real; double imag; 7 } complex; 9 void printComplex(complex \* mc) printf("%lg + %lgi\n", mc->real, mc->imag); 12 } 14 int main() complex  $c1 = \{1.0, 0.5\}$ ; /\* assignment at declaration \*/ printComplex(&c1); /\* pass pointer to struct \*/ c1.real = 10.0;/\* piecewise assignment \*/ printComplex(&c1); return 0;

Complex Number Support in C/C++

C++

21 }

Sam Bott

C for Science

Complex numbers are supported in C++ as classes, also the operators are overloaded properly too meaning any code which uses them will be concise. (look in <complex>).

C99

Complex numbers are supported as a native data type (not struct) in C99. Unfortunately not many compilers support this. GNU C, fully supports complex numbers (see <complex.h>).

C90

Complex number support in C90 is non-existent. I would recommend either third party libraries or a switch to C99/C++ for heavy complex number use.

Sam Bott

```
Matrices continued.
                 Structs
                               More on Scope
                                                           Using Binary Data
                                                                            Summary
                               •000000000
Scope Blocks
Scope Blocks
    Variable scope is not restricted to functions, indeed anything contained in braces (scope blocks) has it's own scope:
     1 #include <stdio.h>
      3
        int main() 4
            int i = 1; 6
            if (i==1)
      8 9
                int j = 10; /* local to if block */ 10 printf("i+j=%d\n", i+j);
    11 12
    13
            /* printf("j = %d\n", j); - error */
    14 15
            return 0;
```

Local Variables

16 }

Sam Bott

C for Science

- Every time F1 () is invoked, the value of i is reset to 1.
- The variable i is a local variable which lives on the stack:
  - $\bullet$  it will be destroyed every time we leave F1 () ,
  - $\bullet\,$  and recreated every time we invoke  ${\tt F1}$  ( ) .
- We can ask the C compiler to retain the value of i:

static variables

A variable can be declared to be static, this tells the C compiler to set aside memory other than the stack to store the variable. The variable will not be destroyed until the program ends.

Sam Bott C for Science

```
Matrices continued...

Occal Variable Lifetime

The lifetime of a local variable is limited:

#include <stdio.h>

void F1()
{

int i = 1;

printf("In F1(): i = %d\n", i);

i = i + 1; /* won't do much */
}
```

Why Use Static Variables?

int main()

F1();

F1();

Sam Bott

C for Science

Static and Global Variables

return 0;

- To count the number of times a function has been called.
- To have the function remember something between calls so on subsequent calls it can calculate what has changed (time, storage, the date, etc...), or resume from where it left off (reading from a list...)

Worked Example: Elapsed Time

- We write a function timer which returns the time since it was last called.
- Our program will contain two .c files to demonstrate linking.

Sam Bott C for Science

```
Matrices continued.
                Structs
                            More on Scope
                                                      Using Binary Data
                                                                     Summary
                            0000000000
Static and Global Variables
Timer Example: timer()
        #include <time.h> /* for clock function */
     3 double timer()
     4 static double oldTime = 0.0;
            double newTime, diff;
            newTime = clock();
     9
            diff = newTime - oldTime;
            oldTime = newTime;
    10 11
            return diff/CLOCKS PER SEC; 12 }
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

```
Matrices continued.
                Structs
                             More on Scope
                                                       Using Binary Data
                                                                       Summary
                             0000000000
Global Variables - Shared between Functions
    We can define a global variable:
     1 #include <stdio.h>
     3 double global = 42.0;
     5 void F1()
           printf("Global = %g\n", global);
     8
    10 int main() 11 {
    12 F1();
    13
           global = global + 1.0; 14 F1();
    15
            return 0; 16 }
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

```
Matrices continued.
                Structs
                            More on Scope
                                                     Using Binary Data
                            000000000
Static and Global Variables
Timer Example: main()
     1 #include <stdio.h>
       double timer(); /* declare timer */
     5 int main() 6 { timer(); /* reset clock */ 8 printf("Wait... and hit return\n");
           getchar(); /* wait for return */ 10 printf("Elapsed time: %.2f seconds\n", timer()); 11
           printf("Resetting clock, hit enter again\n"); 12
           getchar();
    13
           printf("Elapsed time: %.2f seconds\n", timer());
    14
           return 0;
    15 }
Sam Bott
```

C for Science

Matrices continued.

Structs

```
Global Variables - Between Multiple Files

Global to All Files

If we want to share a global variable between files, then we define it once as:

type myglobalvariable = value;

Then in every other file we declare it as:

extern type myglobalvariable;

Global Only to Current File

If we do not wish to share a global variable, we define it as follows:

static type myPrivateGlobal = value;
```

More on Scope

0000000000

Compiling

Using Binary Data

Summary

```
Matrices continued.
                 Structs
                               More on Scope
                                                          Using Binary Data
                                                                          Summary
                               000000000
Static and Global Variables
Shared/Private Global Variables - File 1 of 2
     1 #include <stdio.h> int globalEverywhere = 42;
       static int globalHereOnly = 1;
       void F2(); /* defined in file 2 */ 8 int main()
     9 1.0
           printf("globalEverywhere = %d\n", globalEverywhere); 11 printf("globalHereOnly = %d\n", globalHereOnly);
    12
    13
           F2();
    14 15 printf("globalEverywhere = %d\n", globalEverywhere); 16
           printf("globalHereOnly = %d\n", globalHereOnly);
    17 18
           return 0;
    19 }
Sam Bott
```

Compilation

C for Science

- As seen in the first lecture, C programs are compiled into a low level (machine specific language).
- This language is called assembly language.
- Most C compilers allow you to view the assembler that they generate.

Sam Bott
C for Science

```
Matrices continued.
                Structs
                            More on Scope
                            000000000
Static and Global Variables
Shared/Private Global Variables - File 2 of 2
     1 #include <stdio.h>
     3 extern int globalEverywhere;
     4 /*if we forget the extern we get a linker error */
       static int globalHereOnly = 100;
     8 void F2()
     9 { 10 printf("F2(): globalEverywhere = %d\n", 11
                           globalEverywhere); 12 13
           printf("F2(): globalHereOnly = %d\n", 14
                           globalHereOnly);
    15 }
Sam Bott
```

```
Matrices continued.
                 Structs
                              More on Scope
                                             Compiling
                                                         Using Binary Data
                                                                         Summary
                                             000000 Compilation of C
addMatrices revisited - C code
    From the last lecture we saw a function to add two matrices together:
    void addMatrices(double  matrixA, double  matrixB,
                        double  matrixR,
                        unsigned int rows, unsigned int cols)
       unsigned int i, j;
        for (i = 0; i < rows; i++)</pre> for (j = 0; j < cols; j++)
               matrixR[i][j] = matrixA[i][j]+matrixB[i][j];
    When we compile this, we get...
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

Matrices continued. Structs More on Scope Compiling Using Binary Data 000000 Compilation of C addMatrices revisited - when compiled... _addMatrices PROC $LN3@addMatrice: : { mov eax, DWORD PTR .; $[ebp] eax, DWORD PTR _cols$[ebp] mov ebp, esp SHORT $LN1@addMatrice esp, 216 sub ;matrixR[i][j] = matrixA[i][j]+matrixB[i][j]; push ebx eax, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] mov push ecx, DWORD PTR _matrixA$[ebp] push edx, DWORD PTR [ecx+eax*4] edi, DWORD PTR [ebp-216] lea eax, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] mov mov ecx, DWORD PTR _matrixB$[ebp] eax, -858993460 eax, DWORD PTR [ecx+eax*4] rep stosd ecx, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] ; 36 unsigned int i, j; esi, DWORD PTR _j$[ebp] ; 37 for (i = 0; i < rows; i++)OWORD PTR [edx+ecx+8] mov DWORD PTR _i$[ebp], 0 QWORD PTR [eax+esi*8] SHORT $LN6@addMatrice edx, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] $LN5@addMatrice: eax, DWORD PTR _matrixR$[ebp] mosr. eax, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] ecx, DWORD PTR [eax+edx*4] add eax, 1 edx, DWORD PTR _j$[ebp] mov DWORD PTR _i$[ebp], eax fstp $LN6@addMatrice: SHORT $LN2@addMatrice mov eax, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] $LN1@addMatrice: cmp eax, DWORD PTR _rows$[ebp] SHORT $LN5@addMatrice jae SHORT $LN4@addMatrice $LN4@addMatrice: ; for (j = 0; j < cols; j++) DWORD PTR _j$[ebp], 0 mov esi imp SHORT $LN3@addMatrice ebx SIN2@addMatrice. esp, ebp mov eax, DWORD PTR _j$[ebp] ebp add eax, 1 ret DWORD PTR _j$[ebp], eax _addMatrices ENDP Sam Bott C for Science

Optimisation II

Rather than rewrite the assembly code, it is easier to ask the C compiler to perform code optimisation itself.
By default C will compile the code as it appears (the exact order of operations is preserved etc), this aids debugging.
C compilers can be told to optimise their code in the following ways:

MSVC Project configuration options can be set, defaults in "Release" build do a good job.
gcc The -o command line flags influence optimisation, -oo means "off" whilst -o3 means "extremely aggressive".

More on Scope

Compiling

Using Binary Data

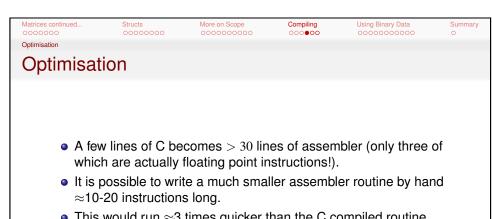

Summary

Matrices continued.

Sam Bott

C for Science

Structs

• This would run  $\approx$ 3 times quicker than the C compiled routine (this is a general rule of thumb).

 Any custom assembly code would only target a very specific chip, however.

Sam Bott

C for Science

Sam Bott

C for Science

Matrices continued.

Optimisation Example - Visual Studio 2008

More on Scope

Debug Build

Structs

$LN2@addMatrice: mov eax, DWORD PTR _j$[ebp] eax. 1 DWORD PTR _j$[ebp], eax $LN3@addMatrice: mov eax, DWORD PTR _j$[ebp] eax, DWORD PTR _cols$[ebp] SHORT $LN1@addMatrice ; matrixR[i][j] = matrixA[i][j]+matrixB[i][j]; eax, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] ecx, DWORD PTR _matrixA$[ebp] edx, DWORD PTR [ecx+eax*4] eax, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] ecx, DWORD PTR _matrixB$[ebp] eax, DWORD PTR [ecx+eax*4] ecx, DWORD PTR _j$[ebp] esi, DWORD PTR _j$[ebp] QWORD PTR [edx+ecx*8] QWORD PTR [eax+esi*8] edx, DWORD PTR _i$[ebp] eax, DWORD PTR _matrixR$[ebp] ecx. DWORD PTR [eax+edx*4] edx, DWORD PTR _j$[ebp] OWORD PTR [ecx+edx+8]

SHORT $LN2@addMatrice

Release Build

;matrixR[i][j] = matrixA[i][j]+matrixB[i][j];

Compiling

Using Binary Data

fld QWORD PTR [edx+eax]
fadd QWORD PTR [eax]
fstp QWORD PTR [esi+eax]
add eax, 8
dec ebx
jne SHORT $LL3@addMatrice

Matrices continued... Structs More on Scope Compilling Using Binary Data Summary

○○○○○○

Efficient Data Packing

Bits and Bytes

Bytes

Smallest addressable unit of memory, each byte is composed of eight bits.

Bits

These are the smallest units of computer memory, each bit can be either 0 or 1.

- Addressing bits individually requires some extra operations to be carried out.
- There are good reasons for accessing data at the bit-level however.

Sam Bott

C for Science

Bit Manipulation Friendly Data Types

As seen before, the unsigned integer data types have values ranging from 0 to  $2^n - 1$  where n is the number of bits in the data type:

Data Type				n
unsigned	short			16
unsigned	int			32
unsigned	long	int		32
unsigned	long	long	int	64

(Unsigned data types are also desirable for accessing array indices as they can never be negative.)

When using these data types for bit data we ignore the resulting value it stores and instead just focus on the n zeros or ones in the data type.

Sam Bott

Efficient Data Packing

Efficient Data Packing

Matrices continued.

Efficient Data Packing

Structs

Given a 32 million base pair chromosome

More on Scope

Using Binary Data

0000000000

It will require:  $\approx$ 128 megabytes to store as int pprox32 megabytes to store as char pprox8 megabytes to store as bit data.

Computer Graphics

Given a monochrome print image of 2400 dpi rendered over 80 square inches gives  $\approx 500,000,000$  dots. This takes up:

 $\approx$ 1 gigabyte if using short  $\approx$ 64 megabytes if using bits.

Sam Bott C for Science

- ...

 Matrices continued...
 Structs
 More on Scope
 Compiling
 Using Binary Data
 Sur

 0000000
 00000000
 0000000
 0000000
 0

 Unsigned Integers
 Using Binary Data
 Sur
 0

How to Get Them In and Out of The Computer

- They can be read using scanf and "%u", "%lu" or "%Lu".
- They can be printed using printf and "%u" or "%Lu".
- We can output to octal (base 8 numbers) using printf and " $^{\circ}_{80}$ "
- Also we can output to hexadecimal (base 16: 0-9 and a-f) using printf and "%x" or "%X".

Example - byte (char)

Binary 10101011

Hexadecimal AB
Decimal 171
Octal 253

Sam Bott

Manipulating Bits within an Unsigned Integer

- C can shift all the bits comprising a number a fixed number of places to the left or right.
- Zeros are propagated in to the vacated spaces.
- Bits that shift outside, disappear. (i.e. the shift is not cyclic).
- Bit shifting is accomplished with the >> (right) and << (left) operators.

For example:

$$1 << 2 = 4$$

 $8 >> 3 = 1$

Bit shifts are much cheaper than multiplying or dividing by powers of two.

Sam Bott

C for Science

Matrices continued. More on Scope Using Binary Data Structs 00000000000

Case Study: The Sieve of Eratosthenes

Algorithm

List all odd numbers up to n. Then, starting at the beginning of the list...

- select next available number in the list, i, as prime
- 2 if  $i \le \sqrt{n}$  remove all multiples of i in the list greater than  $i^2$
- repeat...

We prepend 2 to this list, making it the list of primes < n.

Sam Bott C for Science

ase study. The sieve of Eratostheries

The Sieve of Eratosthenes: In C

- When implementing this in C it makes sense to use a bit to indicate 'primeness' of a number.
- The smallest addressable unit of memory in C is the char which consists of 8 bits.
- We therefore need to perform masking to isolate individual bits.

Masking

We access the  $i^{th}$  bit of a variable x as follows:

Structs

```
\begin{array}{lll} \textbf{if} (\texttt{x & (1 << i)}) & \textbf{Check to see if it's set} \\ \texttt{x |= (1 << i)} & \textbf{To set the bit} \\ \texttt{x &= \sim (1 << i)} & \textbf{To clear the bit} \end{array}
```

More on Scope

Using Binary Data

Sam Bott

C for Science

Matrices continued.

```
00000000000
The Sieve of Eratosthenes: Printing out the Primes
    1 void printPrimes(char * Prime_List, int max_num)
    2
          int i;
          char Mask = 1;
          for (i = 3; i \le max_num; i = i+2) 6
             int Pnum = i / 16;
             short Pbit = (i - Pnum * 16) / 2;
             if (~Prime_List[Pnum] & (Mask << Pbit))</pre> 9 10 printf("%d\n", i);
   11 12
Sam Bott
C for Science
```

```
Matrices continued.
                   Structs
                                 More on Scope
                                                                Using Binary Data
Case Study: The Sieve of Eratosthenes
The Sieve of Eratosthenes: Implementation
     1 void findPrimes(char * Prime_List, int max_num)
           int current_num, sqmax_num;
           char Mask=1;
           sqmax_num = sqrt((float)max_num);
           for(current_num = 3; current_num <= sqmax_num; current_num += 2)</pre> int Pnum = current_num / 16; /Find which char we are on/ short Pbit = (current_num - Pnum * 16) / 2; /Which bit in char/
              if(~Prime_List[Pnum] & (Mask << Pbit))</pre> 13
              { /*if the current bit in the current char is a zero(prime) 14
                  * then lets strike out some multiples*/
                  int strike;
                  for(strike = current_num * current_num; strike <= max_num; strike += 2 * cur 16
    17 18
                     int Snum = strike / 16; 19
                    short Sbit = (strike - Snum * 16)/2;
                    Prime_List[Snum] |= (Mask << Sbit);</pre>
    21
    23
    24 }
```

- More complex array structures can be created with malloc than matrices.
- We can create structs which are our own data types holding multiple values.
- Global variables can be accessed anywhere in your program.
- The lifetime of a variable can be extended by making it static.
- A 'Release' build will optimise your program at compile-time.
- Using the bits that make up individual data types can be an efficient alternative the data types themselves.

Sam Bott

C for Science

Sam Bott